About the College

Maharana Pratap Government Post Graduate College, established in 1979 by the Government of Uttar Pradesh, stands as a distinguished institution of higher learning in district Hardoi. It is committed to the pursuit of academic excellence, inclusive education, skill enhancement, and the broader project of nation-building. The College is affiliated to University of Lucknow, Lucknow, that offers undergraduate and postgraduate programmes in the disciplines of Science and Commerce, alongside a Bachelor of Education (B.Ed.) programme. Anchored in a rich academic legacy and an abiding commitment to knowledge, values, innovation, and social responsibility, the College continues to advance the educational development of the region, contributing meaningfully to the larger National vision of a Viksit Bharat by 2047.

About the City

Hardoi, a historically and culturally significant district of Uttar Pradesh, occupies a distinctive place within the state landscape. Situated approximately 100 kilometres from Lucknow, the state capital, and nearly 380 kilometres from New Delhi, the district functions as a strategically important railway junction on the Delhi–Lucknow corridor, specifically along the Moradabad–Lucknow section. This favourable connectivity renders Hardoi an accessible and convenient locus for scholars, professionals, and cultural practitioners drawn from diverse regions of the country for academic, cultural, and professional engagements.

Traditional narratives preserved in the Puranic scriptures associate the region with the paradigmatic episode of Lord Viṣṇu's Narasimha avatara, wherein the asura king Hiraṇyakashyap was vanquished and the steadfast devotee Prahlada was safeguarded. This mythological linkage endows the district with an enduring sacral and civilizational resonance within India's broader sacred geography. Moreover, the renowned tirth of Naimiṣharanya (Naimish), located approximately 40 kilometres distant, constitutes an ancient centre of pilgrimage, scriptural discourse, and spiritual tradition, thereby amplifying the cultural and intellectual significance of the surrounding region. In light of its strategic accessibility, layered historical inheritance, profound spiritual associations, and expanding educational infrastructure, Hardoi emerges as an eminently suitable setting for scholarly and intellectual assemblies that seek to mediate between India's civilizational heritage and contemporary domains of knowledge, innovation, and the National vision of Viksit Bharat @2047. The district thus exemplifies a space wherein heritage, knowledge, connectivity, and emergent aspirations converge.

Background and Context of Seminar

The vision of Viksit Bharat @2047 extends beyond economic growth and technological advancement. It envisages a nation characterized by knowledge, innovation, human development, social justice, self-reliance, sustainability, cultural confidence and global leadership. The transformation of India into a developed nation will fundamentally depend upon the quality of its human capital. Education therefore occupies a central position in this national transformation. An education system capable of developing creativity, critical thinking, scientific temper, ethical reasoning, problem-solving abilities, entrepreneurial competencies and social responsibility will be essential for preparing citizens for the challenges of the twenty-first century. At the same time, technological developments are transforming almost every dimension of human life. Artificial Intelligence, Generative AI, automation, robotics, Internet of Things, immersive technologies, digital platforms and data-driven systems are redefining education, employment, industry, governance and social interaction. These developments offer unprecedented opportunities but also raise important questions concerning equity, privacy, ethics, employment, human dignity and the future role of educators. Research and innovation will similarly play a critical role in India's transition towards a knowledge-based economy. Universities and educational institutions need to become centres of knowledge creation, innovation, entrepreneurship and problem-solving. Stronger linkages among educational institutions, industry, government and society will be necessary for translating knowledge into meaningful social and economic outcomes. It is in this context that the proposed International Seminar seeks to bring together academicians, researchers, teacher educators, teachers, policymakers, technology experts, industry professionals, entrepreneurs and young scholars from India and other countries to deliberate on the multiple dimensions of India's development journey towards 2047.
